Biography

Brandon Orewyler litigates high-stakes cases. He has represented clients across the financial sector, insurance industry, and Web3 space in complex commercial disputes, consumer class actions, and government enforcement proceedings. He has experience with white collar matters, including conducting internal investigations, and has handled cases involving securities fraud, wage and hour claims, and entertainment contract disputes.

Brandon also provides strategic advice and counsel to startups, investors, and corporate officers and directors on intellectual property and employment matters.

Before joining Miller Barondess, Brandon was a litigation associate at Simpson Thacher & Bartlett and law clerk to the Honorable Daniel J. Buckley in the Complex Civil Division of the Los Angeles Superior Court.

Notable Representations

- Obtained dismissal of several cases brought against large, national insurance companies by their insureds alleging wrongful denial of property insurance coverage for business losses stemming from COVID-19.
- Conducted a comprehensive internal investigation into alleged executive misconduct on behalf of the independent board of directors of a publicly traded company.

- Represented a publicly traded bank in a lawsuit brought by its former CEO for breach of contract, defamation, and fraud.
- Successfully defended a large pest control company in a wage and hour class action and subsequent splinter arbitrations.
